Excerpt: . . . that what was before held not to be a mortgage, becomes such in the view of this court, by reason of the additional chancery powers, with which it has been invested, since the decision in Kelleran v. Brown. These powers, though much extended, are still not general, but limited. No further powers, in relation to equities of redemption, have been given. Those previously granted, were deemed adequate to the enforcement and protection of this species of property. As the public exigencies have, in the opinion of the legislature, called for other specified and enumerated powers, appertaining to this jurisdiction, they have been granted; and have been accordingly extended to cases, where a specific performance of contracts in writing is claimed; and to cases of fraud, trust, accident or mistake. It is not pretended that this is a case falling within either of the four latter sources of jurisdiction. The plaintiffs rights, whatever they may be, depend upon a contract in writing. But giving effect to this contract, could not avail the plaintiff. Where time is not of the essence of the contract, it is sometimes disregarded by a court of equity. But here it was of the essence of the contract. It was the condition, upon which the engagement of Owen to reconvey, was distinctly made to depend. Had this constituted a mortgage, according to our law, the mortgagor would have had three years more, after entry or holding for foreclosure, beyond the time limited; but...
