It was erected under foreign supervision, but it is said to be worked entirely by Chinamen. China feels herself competent to work a telegraph, and has it not o jly from near Peking to Tientsin, but from Tlontsin onward to a river port near Shanghai. As soon as China feels that she can work a railway tho railway will come. A great deal that is said about China being ready for railways is premature. There is hardly a place in the north of the empire where a railroad would pay. What China wants first is good roads. After some 10 or 16 years of good roads an intercommunication traffic will spring up which will call for railways, but at present no such traffic, except perhaps on one route, has b en developed, and a railway, if built to morrow, would stand rusting its...
